Introduction

Care ethics is an approach in moral philosophy that argues:

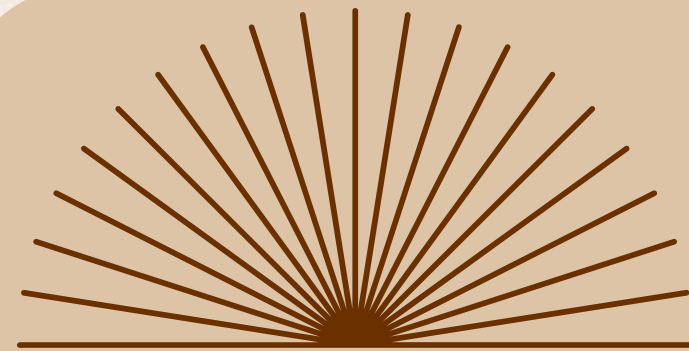

Morality is rooted in caring relationships and the responsibility to respond to others' needs.

CARE ETHICS

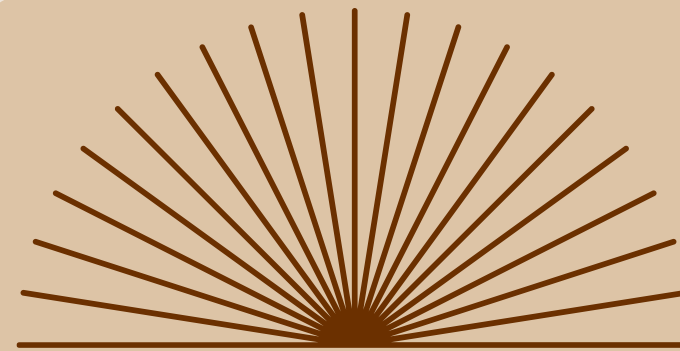

KEY FEATURES

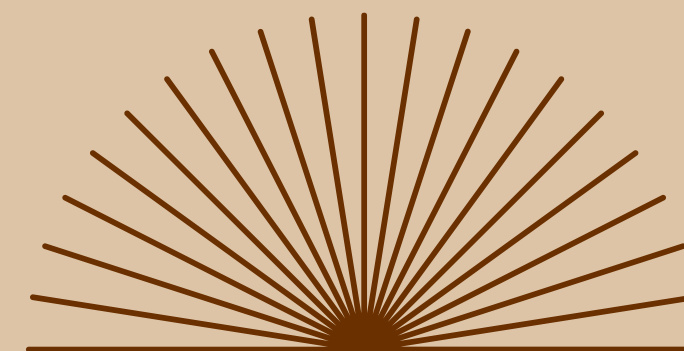

Focus on Relationships

Instead of treating everyone the same, care ethics values close relationships like family, friends, and community.

Emotion Matters

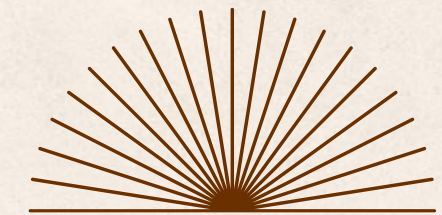

Empathy and compassion guide decisions

Context-Based Decisions

It rejects strict rules. What is right depends on the situation and people involved.

KEY THINKERS

Carol Gilligan – criticized traditional ethics for ignoring women's perspectives

Nel Noddings – emphasized caring as the foundation of ethics

EXAMPLE

Imagine your friend is sick before an exam:

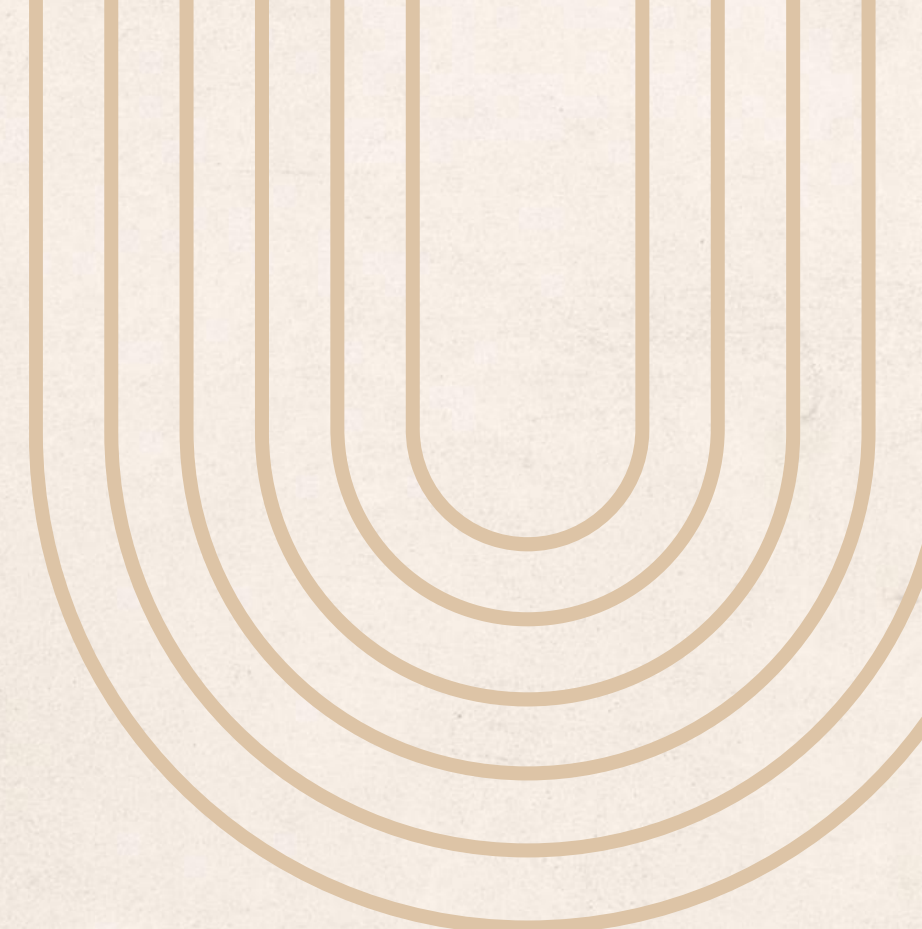

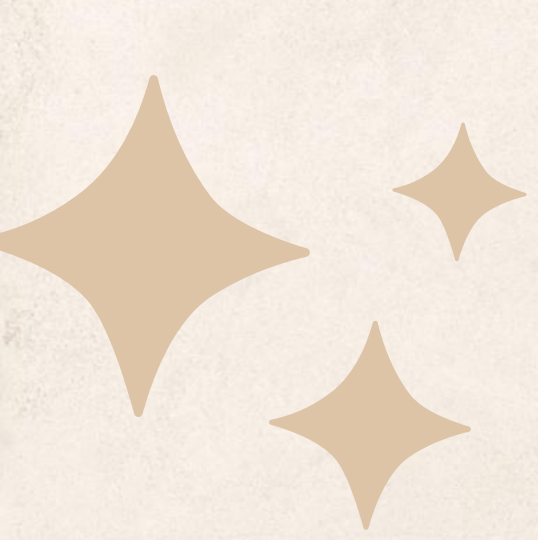

A rule-based theory might say:
“Follow rules, don’t help if it breaks fairness.”

Care ethics says: “Help your friend because they need care and support.”

- Promotes kindness, empathy, and human connection
- Reflects real-life moral decisions
- Values personal relationships

CRITICISMS

- Can be biased (favoring close people over strangers)
- Lacks clear rules → may cause confusion
- May ignore justice or fairness sometimes

CONCLUSION

Care ethics teaches that being moral is not just about following rules, but about caring for others and maintaining meaningful relationships. It brings a more human and emotional side to ethical thinking.
